Harry Ambrose Is Dead at 57

Harry M. Ambrose, 57, General Services Administration architect for 31 years, whose hand helped to guide much of Washington's growth over those years, died yesterday at his home, 1722 19th-st nw, of cancer.

Mr. Ambrose received the GSA award for meritorious service for "co-ordinating the planning and development" of the CIA headquarters soon to be built at Langley, Va. He worked with the New York firm which designed the building. His other projects included the National Institute of Health and the Washington Hospital Center.

Born in Logan, Ohio, Mr. Ambrose had lived here since 1927. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame in architecture in 1925. He was a member of the Notre Dame Club of Washington, Manor Country Club, University Club, and Gyre International.

He is survived by his wife, Jean, an employe of The News for 27 years, and two sisters.

A prayer service will be held at 5 p. m. tomorrow at Gawler's funeral home, 1756 Pennsylvania-av nw. Funeral services and burial will be in Logan on Thursday.
